Local outdoors -- meet a salamander

This Arboreal Salamander has a prehensile tail and breathes through its skin

During the summer, most salamanders in the Berryessa Snow Mountain region are deep underground; but in the wet winter months you can find them on the surface, tucked under rocks and branches.

The Arboreal salamander has a prehensile tail (like some monkeys) with which it can grasp branches or from which it can actually hang. The California Slender salamander has a long body with very tiny legs and feet. If you don't look at it carefully, you might think it's a snake!

Both the Arboreal salamander and the California Slender salamander are found in the family Plethodontidae, called lung-less salamanders. They do not have lungs, but rather breathe through their skin and the membranes in their mouth. They must remain moist at all times, or else they will die. Their "permeable" skin (meaning that it has microscopic holes where the air goes in and out of it) makes them very sensitive to environmental pollutants - like the proverbial canary in the coal mine. If there are poisons or toxins in the soil, or even in the air around Plethodontids, they will die. That's why I always enjoying finding salamanders in my yard; because I know that the area where they live is healthy for me, too!

These gentle creatures spend their lives eating invertebrates (creatures without a backbone) like worms, mites, spiders and small insects. Larger salamanders like the Arboreal salamander will even eat other salamanders.

Salamanders are in a class of animals called amphibians. This class includes frogs and toads, as well as a very strange underground amphibian called a "caecilian" (pronounced 'seh-SILL-yun') – a kind of limbless amphibian which most people will never see in their lifetime because the caecilian lives deep underground. Any creature that lives mainly in damp, loose soil and under leaf litter, logs, and plant debris, is called "fossorial" - which should not be confused with the word fossil. "Fossorial" comes from the Latin word fossor which means digger.

Scientists who are involved in the study of amphibians and reptiles, (like snakes, lizards or alligators) are termed Herpetologists.

If you want to find and study salamanders in more detail, there are some basic rules to which you should adhere:

- First you should probably wear leather gloves when you turn over branches and rocks. There could always be harmful creatures, like poisonous spiders, scorpions, centipedes, and snakes under those spots. In fact, the very same habitat which holds salamanders is also favored by spiders, snakes, and scorpions.
- When you do grasp a rock or piece of wood to look underneath, do not curl your fingers around the underside where they might be bitten.
- You should also turn up the rock or wood so that it is exposed away from your face, rather than lifting it like a lid toward you.
- Take photos of the salamanders you find, but resist the urge to take them home and keep them as "pets". It might seem fun to put them in a terrarium, but it will remove their diversity from the gene pool and prevent them from ever returning to the wild because this could introduce disease into the wild population.
- When you go to return a salamander to its home under the rock or wood, carefully lift the salamander away, replace the cover material (rock or wood), and then place the salamander beside the edge of the covering material so that the salamander can crawl back under cover on its own and not be squished.
- As a final point, you want to remember that the good scientific observer always leaves places looking untouched, just the way they found it. We call this the "leave no trace" ethic.

Oh, and keep in mind, too, that it's very important to wash your hands after handling any salamander. Their skin hosts a large number of harmful bacteria on it as a defensive mechanism to give them a nasty taste to large animals that might eat them. If you find any salamanders in your yard, send the photos to Tuleyome to post on their Facebook page!

When Tom Moy strums his guitar and sings Prison Blues, it's hard to believe that the slight 130-pound senior citizen worked for 26 years as a teacher, principal and acting warden at many of California's prisons.

Tom's career focused on corrections education, an area infrequently reported upon. "Most people are not aware that we have schools within the prison," Tom said.

Tom explained that prisons in California offer, and often require, inmates to take either high school classes, vocational training, or college classes.

Tom, now a West Sacramento resident, was born in Japan where his father was stationed during the occupation after World War II. He followed the lifestyle of a military brat, moving to Washington, D.C., the Panama Canal Zone. Arizona, and back to Washington, D.C..

While in D.C., a friend taught Tom some basic guitar chords, and two years later, he helped form the Stonemen, a rock 'n roll band, Perhaps dog owners have always known this—dogs are compassionate listeners—and that's one of the reasons they are man's best friend.

Not only are they man's best friend, they are often a child's best friend, and in the case of therapy dogs, a child's best reading companion.

That's why every fourth Monday of the month from 4 to 5 pm, the Arthur F. Turner Branch Library at 1212 Merkley Avenue in West Sacramento sponsors "Tales for Tails," a reading program for pre-K to fourth grade kids.

Two years ago, the library partnered with Sacramento-based Lend a Heart Lend a Hand Animal-Assisted Therapy Services. Each month, volunteers bring four therapy-trained dogs of various breeds to the library's community room where the dogs stretch out on doggie beds and listen to youngsters practice reading.

"We wanted a way to encourage more children to read and practice reading," explained Carly Brotherton, a library staffer working in youth services. "We originally started it in the summertime when the kids were out of school and there were fewer opportunities for them to practice reading. We heard about Lend a Heart and thought that it would be a great idea to work with them in a reading program."

"The dogs are really attentive listeners," Carly continued. "They do not criticize, and their patience allows the kids to read at their own pace."

Each monthly session typically draws four dogs and 12 to 15 fledgling student readers.

"The kids can either bring a book, or we have a selection of books that they can choose from," she continued. "The child picks a book, then

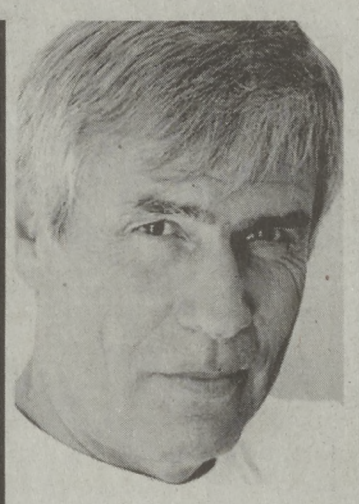
Do creepy-crawly critters freak you out?

My Back Pages



By Daryl Fisher

EDITOR'S NOTE: Those who are unusually squeamish may wish to skip this week's column.

I was talking to a longtime friend the other day and our conversation somehow turned to the subject of creepy, crawly critters.

"I'm like Diane Keaton in that old Woody Allen movie where she called him in the middle of the night to come over to her apartment and kill a spider," explained my friend. "You know, where Woody had to get out a tennis racket to go after the spider because he said it was as big as a Buick."

"Have you always been afraid of spiders?" I asked.

"Oh, it's not just spiders," she assured me, "but any kind of disgusting creepy, crawly thing that can bite me or sting me or just freak me out because it is so ugly and gross-looking! In fact, one of my goals in life has been to never let a creepy, crawly thing near me, because if one ever somehow actually got on me, I would surely die right there on the spot!"

"Well," I said, "then you are really lucky you never had to go to Vietnam."

"Vietnam?"

"Yes, because that place was like the Jurassic Park of creepy, crawly critters, and not only did they come in every shape and color imaginable, they were also absolutely huge, as if they were being fed some kind of insect super-diet. And since I was playing war at the time, I often had to sleep out where they all lived, in the Vietnamese jungle. As for spiders, the ones I remember were horned spiders, lynx spiders, jumping spiders, football spiders, huge wood spiders, huntsman spiders, spitting spiders...."

"They had spiders in Vietnam that spit?" interrupted my friend with a look of horror on her face.

"Believe me, they had every kind of spider you can think of over there, including ones that spit, and they all seemed to have huge biting fangs, which I guess they needed to suck the life out of all the different kinds of bugs they gorged themselves on. And bugs were even more numerous than spiders, and the place was crawling with beetles, moths, flies, mosquitos, ticks, giant caterpillars, big old water bugs, and the one that everyone hated the most, these huge biting red fire ants that always had an attitude and seemed to love to attack American soldiers who were just strolling through the jungle trying to do their job. They worked in gangs, too, and those things were so vicious that I saw guys stand up in the middle of a fire fight and try to swat them off their clothes and exposed skin."

As our conversation continued, we moved on from spiders and bugs and up the food chain until we came to giant rats and colorful venomous snakes.

"The Vietnamese often sat out rat traps and we would stumble over the darn things," I said, "thinking we had surely stepped on a booby trap of some kind, only to find a captured rat so big that you could skip rope with its tail."

"Okay, you are starting to really gross me out now," said my friend. "But at least the Vietnamese were trying to kill the rats."

"Actually, they were trying to trap them to use as a protein source," I explained, "and chunks of boiled rat on top of a plate of hot rice was a common meal in some of the villages."

"Yuck!"

"But if you really want to talk about gross, I could tell you about the parasites I came home with from Vietnam."

"Parasites?" she asked, her eyes suddenly wide open. "You mean you had creepy, crawly things on the inside of you?"

"Yes."

"That's absolutely disgusting! How in the world did you get those?"

"The doctors were never really sure, and it also took them a long time to figure out I had them. You want to know how they did it?"

"I think so," she answered cautiously.

"They made me very slowly swallow 25 or 30 feet of string."

"Seriously?"

"Yes, and if you've ever tried to eat string, it's not easy. You have to swallow a little bit at a time and it takes forever to swallow that much of it. But when I had finally finished, they taped the end of it to my mouth and put me to sleep for the night. Then bright and early the next morning, they started carefully pulling the string up out of my intestines and stomach."

"I'm starting to gag here!"

"And when they had finished, they found some baby parasites trapped on the sticky string."

"Then what did they do?"

"They poisoned me."

"And how did they do that?"

"With Mountain Dew."

"They poisoned you with soda water?"

"Yes. They pointed to a soda machine and asked me which one I liked. And the Mountain Dew can looked kind of green and refreshing, so I chose it. Then they poured this god-awful medicine into a big cup of it and told me to drink it, and then made me do it two more times. And before I was done, I was barfing my guts out and to this day I cannot look at a can of Mountain Dew without wanting to throw up!"

"And that killed the parasites?"

"More or less, but they had to keep testing for a long time to make sure they didn't return."

"And how did they do that?" my friend asked with interest.

"Do you really want to know? It's pretty gross."

"Well, I have gone this far, so why not. But I will tell you to stop if it gets too bad, okay."

"Okay. They did it by having me carefully prepare endless stool samples for many months. So let's just say that I kind of became an expert at doing that task, and that there was a time in my life when my refrigeration had more s___ in it than food and beverages."

"Stop, stop, stop!"

> "The Vietnamese often sat out rat traps and we would stumble over the darn things," I said, "thinking we had surely stepped on a booby trap of some kind, only to find a captured rat so big that you could skip rope with its tail."

from the University of Houston with a degree in social studies with the goal to become a high school teacher. After being assigned a low Vietnam War draft lottery number, he was called to Oakland, California for an Army induction physical.

Wearing his Coke-bottle glasses, the doctors weren't surprised that he had difficulty reading the eye chart, and "I couldn't even see the eye chart without my glasses," Tom said. "So they sent me away."

But since he was already in California, he applied for teaching jobs but was unsuccessful. "I wanted to teach high school so badly," Tom said. "Finally, in 1974, an opening came up—to teach history, literature and English at a high school for adult prisoners at the Norco California Rehabilitation Center."

Tom would teach in the prison system for 26 years.

After receiving a masters degree in school administration, he moved to a job as assistant principal at the Stockton Correctional Facility. Tom became principal when his supervisor became ill.

Then, the warden asked Tom if he could back her up when needed. "That's when I became the acting warden," he said.

"A prison is like a small city," Tom explained. "The warden is like the mayor. I walked the grounds and oversaw everything: educational, medical, recreational, culinary, records and officers."

"I was a hands-on supervisor. For instance, in the kitchen, I would check for tools that were not there, and if they were not in their place, there better be a chit hung where a tool had been removed. And I would taste test the quality of the food. The supervisor would watch me anxiously, hoping that I would not pick apart the meal."

Most inmates at the prisons where he taught were substance abusers who had committed a crime to support their drug habit. They wore blue chambray shirts and jeans, and came in all sizes and shapes. Initially, Tom was nervous. "But I focused on my desire to teach—that trumped my fear. After two years, I realize that the only thing that I feared was the barbed wire and the clanging of the gates."

"This was my mission. I had to learn how to say and do things without showing fear—and stand my ground. I learned that it's better to come towards them than to let them come towards me. It puts them off balance."

Tom taught at several prisons. While working at Folsom, he was asked to write about himself for a unit newsletter. Modestly, he wrote one sentence. His boss encouraged him to write two more sentences. And then the bug hit him and he realized that he enjoyed writing.

He retired in 2010, and one of his projects is to write about unknown Chinese pioneers of the old West—starting with China Mary of Tombstone, Arizona. "She controlled the drugs and gambling in the Chinese community," Tom said. "If you wanted a job you had to go to her."

Looking back at his years teaching in prisons, Tom noted, "I enjoyed the individuality of each person that I worked with, and I was thrilled by their progress in my classroom. Inmates are no different from any other student who want to learn. They just need the right person to help them."

City's two little leagues pitch in

(Photos and information are courtesy of Washington Little League and Anthony Robles)

West Sacramento has a long tradition of Little League baseball.

The town is divided into two different leagues – there's "West Sacramento Little League" serving the north and central areas, and the much smaller "Washington Little League" in the north.

The leagues may be entering a new period of cooperation. Both little leagues pitched in last Saturday, March 7, to work on the Roy Snider Field, Washington's home field.

The West Sacramento league donated dirt, paint, heavy equipment and manpower. Washington's league brought coffee and donuts in the morning for the workers and provided lunch for all who contributed.

The show of unity between the league may launch a new era of Little League in the community. West Sacramento Little League has close to 700 players, with multiple teams and graduated divisions for each age group. Washington, in contrast, has 70 players and fields no more than two teams in each age level.

"We're doing it for the kids," said West Sacramento Little League President Ron Yarbrough "This is great chance for our communities to come together," commented Washington Little League's vice president, Joe Brown. "All of the other sports in our neighborhood are combined, why not baseball?"

Thieves stole City of West Sacramento irrigation equipment, including copper wire, from several different facilities. The loss was estimated at $2,000.

March 12

A thief "used fear" to steal a $100 mountain bike from a man near Laurel Lane and Poplar Avenue.

March 12, 11:25 a.m.

A car-versus-boat chase, with gunfire, took place along the Sacramento River next to Southport. The incident is pieced together from a couple of police reports:

A man was fishing from the riverbank near Linden Road and South River Road in Southport "when a boat ran down his lines, taking his poles into the river."

The fisherman, a Rancho Cordova man in a white Toyota 4Runner, chased the boat downriver with a scoped .22 rifle, firing at the boat.

Police contacted the driver and the boaters, who were found across the river in Miller Park. The boaters said the man shot at them at least 6-10 times, with "several of the rounds hitting the boat within feet of where they were sitting and hiding." They said they were unaware they had run over the man's lines.

The suspect, found with a rifle, admitted to about three shots. The boat had several bullet holes in it. The suspect was jailed.

March 12, 5:30 a.m.

A security officer interrupted an attempted theft in front of a motel on the 800-block of West Capitol Avenue. The thieves were trying to make off with a fiberglass horse statue.

"Community participation and input is a vital component of our collaborative policy development approach in Yolo County," said Cardall in a press release. "All interested residents of Yolo County are encouraged to attend."

Joke of the week:

A military base commander called a contractor to complain that the weather-forecasting software the company created for them kept reporting unexplainable wind shifts.

"Do you know where the sensor is located?" the contractor asked.

"Of course," the commander responded. "It's where we park the helicopters."

PICKS OF THE WEEK

"The Imitation Game" (PG-13) -- Alan Turing was a renowned genius, roboticist, code-breaker, Nazi-confounder and all-around British treasure. In the 1940s he led a team of geniuses who broke the Germans' "unbreakable" code and laid the foundation for modern computers. In the '50s, Turing (Benedict Cumberbatch) was arrested, tried and convicted for the crime of homosexuality. This biopic goes in-depth with a brilliant man's struggles against persecution.

The film won the Oscar for best adapted screenplay, on top of a pile of nominations. Cumberbatch should have taken the Best Actor, but that of course went to Eddie Redmayne, who was in a different biopic about a different British genius struggling against non-scientific challenges. Still, Cumberbatch's performances -- and Keira Knightly playing opposite -- stand strong.

Benedict Cumberbatch in "The Imitation Game"

"Interstellar" (PG-13) -- In the not-too-distant future, crops are failing, populations are dwindling and the earth is enshrouded in a new Dust Bowl. Matthew McConaughey stars as Cooper, a brilliant engineer -- forced into farming for the past few years, like everyone else -- who takes on a last-ditch space mission to find a new home for mankind, somewhere among the stars. Cooper and scientist Dr. Brand (Anne Hathaway) must travel through a wormhole from which no one has ever returned.

Directed by Christopher Nolan ("Inception," "The Dark Knight" trilogy), this space adventure has some cool ideas covered up by stretches of boredom and cheesy dialog. I couldn't contain laughter when Hathaway ardently declares that love is a quantifiable entity. It's a long ride with some cool twists, but the movie plows through most of the emotional rest stops along the way.

"Wild" (R) -- Reese Witherspoon plays a woman who takes a solo walk for more than 1,100 miles of the Pacific Crest Trail -- for reasons that aren't easy to spell out, even for her. There a sense that she has no control over her life. She seems caught between destructive behavior when she's alone, and toxic relationships when she tries to connect. Based on the memoir by Cheryl Strayed, this is doubtlessly Witherspoon's best performance since "Walk the Line," perhaps her best on film.

"The Rewrite" (PG-13) -- Hugh Grant has a way of stumbling over his words, fidgeting, looking around and then saying something understatedly clever or disarmingly earnest. It's his modus operandi. If he were a pro wrestler, stammering through a sheepish grin would be his signature move. In this way-too-old-for-coming-of-age dramedy, Grant plays a washed-up Hollywood screenwriter who reluctantly accepts a gig teaching screenwriting at a little college in upstate New York. First he's a jerk, but then he must learn some lessons and repair relationships with the various stereotypical characters he's offended with his offbeat charm.

"The Good Girl"
by Mary Kubica
(Mira, $14.95)
Reviewed by Ealish Waddell

Early in "The Good Girl" (new in paperback) we meet Mia, who's recently returned home after being kidnapped and held for months in a remote cabin in the frigid Minnesota wilderness. So the reader knows right off the bat that she will be found and rescued safely. The real mystery of this suspenseful thriller is in figuring out what exactly happened in that cabin, and why Mia can't seem to remember any of it.

Constructed with a time-jumping plot that glimpses various points before, after and during the abduction, the story is told largely in the alternating voices of three characters: Eve, Mia's mother, who loves her daughter deeply and fiercely but has never been able to understand her. Gabe, the detective assigned to the investigation, increasingly driven to close the case for Eve's sake as well as his own. And Colin, Mia's abductor, a man long hardened to brutal reality but suddenly learning just what his limits are.

True to this narrative design, Mia herself is a bit of a cipher. She's viewed mostly through the eyes of the three fallible narrators, each of whom also is trying to figure her out themselves. When, late in the story, Mia finally gets her own say, the impact is devastating: Unexpected secrets are revealed and relationships altered forever.

There actually are several stories intertwining here, and the themes of guilt, disappointment and resentment thread their way through them all. In one, each member of a fractured family is doomed in a different way by a lifelong lack of communication and care. In another, desperation leads to an escalating series of epically bad decisions. But in them all, despite everything, people keep instinctively grasping for connection and understanding -- and sometimes find it in the most unlikely of places.

The Kitchen Diva

Pretty Delicious in Pink

Get ready to pucker up. Because it's time for rhubarb -- a sweet, tart treat. Loved by many, and misunderstood by more than a few, rhubarb with its deep-pink stalks is often a little hard to find. But keep searching because this jewel of spring is not to be missed.

Rhubarb can be a rare discovery, even when in season. For many, it's still a taste never tried. Others may have tasted rhubarb that had fallen into the wrong hands, leaving them with an unfortunate first impression. So why doesn't this lovely fruit have a wider appeal? For starters, it's not technically a fruit, but a herbaceous perennial vegetable. However, in 1947 a New York State court decided that since it was most frequently used as a fruit, it would be classified for regulation and duty purposes as such.

Rhubarb is at its best when the stalks are thin, red and have a crisp texture. If the stalks are floppy, it means that it's not freshly picked. Wrap rhubarb stalks in plastic and refrigerate for up to a week. Rhubarb also is sold frozen in some areas and can be used in place of fresh.

It's true that some parts of the plant are poisonous. The colorful stalks are what we eat, but the leaves contain toxins. This usually is not a problem, as the rhubarb in the market already has the leaves removed. Those lucky enough to have their own rhubarb plant know about this minor imperfection and handle it appropriately.

The lip-puckering, tart flavor of rhubarb also requires some getting used to. Some varieties are sweeter than others and can be eaten raw, but that's not common. Rhubarb really comes alive when it is cooked, either stewed or roasted, and mixed with other ingredients. In sweet and savory dishes, this tart vegetable lends a special flavor that can't be compared to anything else.

Its gorgeous pink color is an indicator that rhubarb is full of antioxidants, as well as calcium and fiber. Rhubarb will keep in your refrigerator for up to a week, but to enjoy its full flavor, use it right after buying or harvesting.

Rhubarb is often called the "pie plant." It is delicious when mixed with strawberries and other fruit in pies and cobblers. It's also good in relishes and compotes, and in dishes that showcase its tangy flavor.

Rhubarb is the star of this recipe for Pork Chops with Spicy Rhubarb and Golden Raisin Sauce. The tartness of the rhubarb combined with the sweetness of the raisins is the perfect complement for the richness of the pork chops.

PORK CHOPS WITH SPICY RHUBARB AND SAUCE

1/2 cup golden raisins
1 tablespoon balsamic vinegar
1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce
1 teaspoon plus 2 tablespoons olive oil
1/2 cup finely chopped onion
2 cloves garlic, minced
1/2 small jalapeno, with ribs and seeds, diced
8 to 10 ounces rhubarb, ends trimmed, cut crosswise into 1/2-inch pieces (2 cups)
3 tablespoons sugar
1/8 teaspoon ground nutmeg
1 1/2 teaspoons salt
1 1/2 teaspoons ground pepper
2 tablespoons poultry seasoning
4 pork loin chops, (each 1/2 inch thick and 6 to 8 ounces)

1. In a small bowl, combine raisins with vinegar, Worcestershire sauce and 1/4 cup hot water; let stand 10 minutes to soften.

2. In a small saucepan, heat 1 teaspoon oil over medium-low heat. Add onion; cook until softened, 3 to 5 minutes. Add garlic and jalapeno and cook for another 3 minutes, stirring occasionally.

3. Add the rhubarb and sugar; and bring to a boil. Reduce heat; simmer until rhubarb has softened, 5 to 8 minutes. Stir in nutmeg; season with 1/2 teaspoon of the salt and pepper. Remove from heat; keep warm.

4. Generously season both sides of pork chops with the remaining teaspoon of salt and pepper, and the poultry seasoning.

5. In a large skillet, heat remaining 2 tablespoons oil over medium-high heat. Cook pork (in two batches, if necessary, to avoid crowding the pan) until browned and cooked through, 3 to 4 minutes per side. Serve topped with the warm Spicy Rhubarb and Golden Raisin sauce. Serves 4.

TIP: The golden raisins can be replaced with other dried fruit, such as cherries or currants and softened as instructed.

THE PETITION FOR PROBATE requests that SCOTT FERRELL be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent.

THE PETITION requests authority to administer the estate under the Independent Administration of Estates Act . (This authority will allow the personal representative to take many actions without obtaining court approval. Before taking certain very important actions, however, the personal representative will be required to give notice to interested persons unless they have waived notice or consented to the proposed action.) The independent administration authority will be granted unless an interested person files an objection to the petition and shows good cause why the court should not grant the authority.

A HEARING on the petition will be held in this court as follows: 04/07/15 at 9:00AM in Dept. 2 located at 725 COURT ST., WOODLAND, CA 95695

IF YOU OBJECT to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney.

IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within the later of either (1) four months from the date of first issuance of letters to a general personal representative, as defined in section 58(b) of the California Probate Code, or (2) 60 days from the date of mailing or personal delivery to you of a notice under section 9052 of the California Probate Code.

Other California statutes and legal authority may affect your rights as a creditor. You may want to consult with an attorney knowledgeable in California law.

YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a Request for Special Notice (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. A Request for Special Notice form is available from the court clerk.

The undersigned caused said Notice of Default and Election to Sell to be recorded in the county where the real property is located. NOTICE TO POTENTIAL BIDDERS: If you are considering bidding on this property lien, you should understand that there are risks involved in bidding at a trustee auction. You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property. NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER: The sale date shown on this notice of sale may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or a court, pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. The law requires that information about trustee sale postponements be made available to you and to the public, as a courtesy to those not present at the sale. If you wish to learn whether your sale date has been postponed, and, if applicable, the rescheduled time and date for the sale of this property, you may call, 916-939-0772 for information regarding the trustee's sale or visit this Internet Web site, www.nationwideposting.com, for information regarding the sale of this property, using the file number assigned to this case, T.S.# 9411-7463. Information about postponements that are very short in duration or that occur close in time to the scheduled sale may not immediately be reflected in the telephone information or on the internet Web site. The best way to verify postponement information is to attend the scheduled sale. If the Trustee is unable to convey title for any reason, the successful bidder's sole and exclusive remedy shall be the return of monies paid to the Trustee and the successful bidder shall have no further recourse. DOGGIES from page 1 picks a dog to read to—and then sits down on the floor and the child reads a story or a chapter, depending on what kind of book they selected, After a while, the child selects a different dog. They can read to several dogs in a session."

"The Tales for Tails program promotes literacy," Carly noted. "One parent, Stella Mochel, told me that her daughter, Rebecca Rose, 'cannot wait to come to the program. She never misses it. She reads twice as much to the dog here in that one afternoon than she does at home.'"

"I heard that they like reading to the dog more, because the dog isn't correcting them every time that they make a mistake," Carly said. "They just enjoy reading to the dog, and would rather read to the dog than to an older brother or sister, or mom and dad."

Carly said that the most popular book during the sessions is called Hi! Fly Guy, about a child's pet—a talking fly that has pet judges split between calling it a pet or a pest. Other favorites are books from the Dr. Seuss series.

"The children love the dogs. They show no hesitation to pet the trained dogs. Some children ask if they could bring their own dogs. Only trained dogs are allowed," Carly cautioned.

As an added incentive, readers who attend five sessions, receive a free book.

Rebates for light bulbs

Now that you've adjusted your clocks for daylight savings time, Pacific Gas and Electric Co. (PG&E) is reminding customers that they can save money – up to $7 per bulb – on Advanced LED light bulbs with in-store rebates at participating home improvement retailers.

PG&E's Chief Customer Officer Laurie Giammona said, "PG&E's Advanced LED lighting rebates are great for families who want to save money and improve the quality of light in their homes while being more energy efficient."

Advanced LED light bulbs use about 75 percent less energy than traditional incandescent bulbs and offer a supreme light quality. Advanced LED light bulbs are designed to last 20 years or longer and are backed by a five-year manufacturer warranty. They offer many other benefits over incandescent and fluorescent types; they're non-toxic, dimmable, cool to the touch and offer instant brightness and brilliant color and warmth that looks better in any room.

PG&E is partnering with major retailers such as Home Depot, Lowe's, Ace Hardware, Costco and 99 Ranch Market to give customers instant rebates and make the Advanced LEDs easy to spot on store shelves. To find a participating store, visit www.pge.com/advancedLED and look for PG&E's Advanced LED signage in the lighting section.
